Anne Lambert
People of London Town, Maryland¹

Anne Lambert (sometimes referred to as Lambeth) was a Quaker woman who lived in London Town. A section of David Macklefish's will mentions a lot in London Town that she formerly occupied.² However, it is unclear exactly which lot that was. There is speculation that she either owned lot 74 or 86 based on her will, the will of David Macklefish, and a land transaction mentioning a lot owned by Jane (Macklefish) Burges and Stephen West, Sr.³ She also owned other tracts of land, as evidenced by her land transactions with Samuel White⁴, Thomas Robertson, and George Robertson.⁵

According to Hester Dorsey Richardson, Anne Lambert used to host weekly and monthly meetings at her house "near the head of South River."⁶ Where exactly this house was located is not yet known.

At the time of her death, Anne Lambert owned five slaves, all of whom she manumitted in her will. Mingoe and Bess and their two children, Mingoe and Bess (or Biss), were to be free after the crop was completely finished. Nan was to be manumitted when she reached the age of twenty-three in 1711. Before then, she was to finish her "servitude" with Anne Lambert's friend, Elizabeth Richardson.⁷

Anne Lambert was clearly devoted to her religion because she requested that two-thirds of the proceeds from the sale of her personal estate be given to the Quakers on the western shore of Maryland and the other third be given to the Quakers "at London." Her will indicates the possibility that she did not have any children, as she manumitted her slaves, left her money to the Quakers, and bequeathed her furniture and clothes to friends.
